WASHINGTON, D. C., MARCH 28, 1881. OUR PREACHER.

BY CHARLEY STEEL. The preacher knew, I've not the slightest doubt, The preacher knew, I've not the signest doubt,
When calling on my young and pretty wife,
That I was not at home, but had gone out.
But I returned, and never in my life
Beheld a sight that caused me more surprise.
I thought they each disliked the other quite,
And really I could scarce believe my eyes,
The preacher had an arm about her tight. The preacher had an arm about her, tight,

The preacher had an arm about her, tight,
Her head upon the preacher's shoulder lay,
One arm around the preacher's neck was wound,
And while they stood there in that loving way.
Their lips met! yes, they kissed; I heard the sound— Why did I not rush in-the preacher kill ?

Was I not wild with rage? Oh, not at all. They threatened to repeat it. Hope they will, Our preacher is a woman—that is all. HAMS.

THE PRESIDENT'S KISS. The Jackals' Pursuit of General Garfield and the Little White-Haired Mother. One or two brutes, in writing about the inauguration ceremonies, have taken occasion to attack President Garfield, in such language as might be expected from their class, for turning after he had taken the oath of office to his mother and wife and kissing them. To afford ground for attack the act was described as one performed before the gaze of the great crowd of officials and multitude of the spectators. Premising that this is true, one of these writers in the Nation in a communication which could hardly have passed under the editor's eye, questions whether this act of the President was ity as false as it was obtrusive." Mrs. Hayes sat back of the Chief-Justice, with General Garfield's mother next her on the left and Mrs. Garfield next to her. The balustrading along the front, heavily draped as it was with flags, almost entirely, if it did not wholly, conceal these ladies from the vast audience in front, while those who stood back of them shut them in from the sight of the mass of officials on the platform. A few of the correspondents who had been given seats close to the presidential party, and a few of those near General Garfield as he turned from the platform, in common with all the rest, saw that he stooped to kiss his old mother and then his wife, who sat next to her. It was an act as far removed as possible from the spectacular, and there was scarcely a dry eye in the whole circle which noticed this beautiful act of filial and manly devotion. There had been a multitude of moist eyes in the Senate chamber. as one after another of the great crowd there recognized the white-haired mother of the President. There had been many more as she was helped down the steps of the east porch and forward to a seat near her son. Her covered as she passed to do her honor. To
